Delayed-feathering in chickens is a genetically determined delay in the first weeks of feather growing, which occurs normally among the chicks of many chicken breeds and no longer manifests itself once the chicken completes adult plumage. The difference between fast normal feather development and delayed-feathering can be recognized in one-day-old chicks but is always more evident in 10- to 12-day-old chicks. Female chicks have a slightly faster feathering than males. Barely seen in breeds with

Beginners find zero feather angle easier. "The best thing to do is try it on novices," said Chalupsky. "Take three novices, give one a paddle with 50 degrees left, another with 50 degrees right and the third with zero degrees. "I guarantee, the one with 50 degrees right feather will fall in to the right.

Ducklings should not be allowed to swim unsupervised for the first few weeks of life, because they do not have waterproof feathers yet. In nature, mother ducks would coat the ducklings in oil from their own glands, but in human care, ducklings must wait for their own oil glands to mature before they can swim safely.
