Squares, circles, and triangles are the three most common geometric shapes that form the basis for most of Gann's work. Gann's wheels and squares are some of the most common applications and form the cornerstone of Gann's work. For example, Square of nine, Square of 144 and the Hexagon are some of the many works from Gann that are popular.

Gann's theory focuses on the ideology that geometry is relative to time and price. This is somewhat simplistic thanks to a chart called Ganna square or Gann Master Chart, which became the basis of Ganna trading. It consists of numbers, one of which is the midpoint and gradually continues counting to 81 in the form of a spiral.
