'The Dance of Life' (1929) is the film version of a hit Broadway play called 'Burlesque', which starred Barbara Stanwyck. The original title was considered too racy for movie audiences, so the film producers bought the rights to a best-selling NON-fiction book about sex, 'The Dance of Life', just so they could use the book's title for this movie based on 'Burlesque'.

The Dance of Life or Life's Dance is an 1899-1900 expressionist painting by Edvard Munch, now in the National Museum of Art in Norway. The arch of life spans from white young virgin in white over the pair with red wife to an old widow in black. The painting was an important work in Munch's project The Frieze of Life.

Now The Dance of Life reveals the ways in which individuals in culture are tied together by invisible threads of rhythm and yet isolated from each other by hidden walls of time. Hall shows how time is an organizer of activities, a synthesizer and integrator, and a special language that reveals how we really feel about each other.

Ellis' idea that life is art, a dance, is appealing, particularly to those of us who already have an artistic bent, and it's a sentiment that most of us have had at one time or another. Ellis develops his metaphor by looking at some major institutions of life: religion, morality, the arts in general and writing in particular.
